SYNOD WILL MEET IN HISTORIC CHURCH

Celebrate 100th Anniversary of Organization as Church Court.

BY MAMIE BAYS.

Greensboro, N. C., October 4.—Alamance Church, in Guilford county, six miles east of Greensboro, N. C., will be the scene of a gathering of more than usual interest and importance on Tuesday, October 7, when the Synod of North Carolina of the Presbyterian Church in the United States will assemble in that church to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of its organization as a church court.

The community in which Alamance Church is located is composed of the most part of Scotch-Irish people, and judging from the oldest deeds that are now in existence in the county, it was in 1731 that the first settlers came to the county. William Cusack gave to the church a deed for 636 acres of land in 1755, and upon this property the first church building, a log meeting-house, was erected, and during the years that have passed since then three other church buildings have been built in its stead—first a frame house, then a modest one of brick, which was taken down in 1874 because it was deemed unsafe, and in 1879 the present house of worship, which is a substantial one of brick, was erected. Within the past few months this church building has been thoroughly remodeled and has been enlarged as well, a wing having been added on each side. The seating capacity of the church is now 500 to 600. In addition to the recent improvements made in the church and the refurbishing, a gas lighting system and furnace have been installed, thus giving to the membership one of the best country church buildings to be found in the general assembly.

Copies of the Bible constituted an important part of the portable property of the early settlers of the Alamance community, as is evidenced by numbers of copies to be seen there at this time that bear dates early in the eighteenth century. The strong religious sentiment of the community in the early days is shown further by the fact that among the favorite books in the libraries were the "Pilgrim's Progress" and Fox's "Book of Martyrs." The Alamance community, the territory of which extended over an area of sixteen miles, grew rapidly after the deed to the church property was received. The origin of the name Alamance is not known. Agriculture was of this community engaged.

Historic Territory.
The original highest court of the Presbyterian Church in America was the Synod of Philadelphia, which was organized early in the eighteenth century. The Synod of New York was organized a short time afterwards, and these two synods were then united in the Synod of the United States of Philadelphia, N. C. In September, 1770, it was given the name Orange Presbytery, and its territory included a large scope of country and churches which are now in several States. Alamance Church, in which the Synod of North Carolina was organized several years later, was in a part of this historic territory.

The Synods of Philadelphia and New York sent ministers frequently to preach in settlements of Presbyterians in the South and Southwest, and to administer the ordinances of the church. It was one of these ministers, Rev. Henry Pattillo, who organized Alamance Church, probably in 1762. The first pastor of this church was Rev. David Caldwell, a native of Pennsylvania, and the first church building was erected in 1762, it being succeeded by the second in 1800. Adjoining the churchyard is the graveyard, the first headstones being of slate and soapstone, of quaint device, and bearing singular inscriptions. What is believed to be the oldest headstone in the graveyard is that of a child, and it bears the date of death—October 14, 1767.

Alamance Church was organized with twenty-two members. This number was increased soon to seventy-five, and remained at that figure until 1850, when, as the result of a great revival in the community the year previous, the number of members was increased to 120. It has been said frequently that "the original type of Alamance Christianity was fervent, and it has so remained, and the history of the church has been marked by revivals." The first three pastors of this church—Rev. David Caldwell, Rev. Eli Caruthers and Rev. William L. Miller—were missionaries sent from the United Synod and their work extended through 1865. Nine pastors have served this church since that time, the present pastor being Rev. A. W. Crawford, who began his work there in March of the present year. The membership of the church has now reached 400.

Sends Out Ministers.

A large number of young men have entered the ministry of the Presbyterian and other denominations from the membership of Alamance Church—one for every six years of the history of the church. A large number of these ministers have risen to prominence in the pulpit, in educational work of the church and as men of letters. One of these, Rev. William Paisley, who was born and reared in the congregation of Alamance Church, was the founder and the first pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Greensboro. Interest attaches not only to the religious history of Alamance Church, but to the secular history as well. The latter shows that this community included the territory of Orange and Rowan Counties, all of this territory were the counties of Alamance and Guilford. This community at that time, this community has been under two local and three national governments. It was originally in the Province of North Carolina, under the authority of the British crown, then in the United States of America, later in the Confederate States, and now in the United States again. It has contributed men to the service of three wars, none of these rising to distinction in this service. It has given also numerous men to State and national Legislatures, and has contributed members to the Superior Court, the District Court, and in many instances, to the cause of secular education, furnishing many teachers for this work.

On October 7, 1913, when the Synod of North Carolina was organized, there were present in Alamance Church twelve ministers and three ruling elders. These represented three presbyteries, in which it was estimated there were probably 4,000 communicants. It was from that small beginning one hundred years ago that the Presbyterian Church in North Carolina has grown to a religious force of 50,000 members, and one that is second to none in this Commonwealth in point of influence for good and splendid accomplishment for the cause of Christianity at home and abroad. Presbyterianism has been a great and noble force in the missionary enterprise in the home land and in foreign fields and in liberal giving to the same that the work begun in Alamance Church a century ago has been justified many times. And every honor that comes to the Synod of North Carolina adds honor to Alamance Church already rich in honor, because of the distinction which must and does belong to the church, which is the mother of organized Presbyterianism in the Old South State.

Centennial Celebration.
The centennial celebration will include an address of welcome by the pastor of the church, Rev. A. W. Crawford, two addresses on "The Beginnings and Development of Presbyterianism in North Carolina to 1863," by Rev. Walter W. Moore, D. D., and Rev. Walter L. Lingle, D. D., of Richmond, two addresses on "The Personals of the Presbyterian Church in North Carolina to 1863," by Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D., of Maxton, N. C., and Rev. J. M. Roper, D. D., of Hillsville, N. C., and two addresses on "The Last Fifty Years: The Presbyterian Church as an Evangelistic Agency," by Rev. R. F. Campbell, D. D., of Asheville, N. C., and Rev. J. M. Roper, D. D., of Hillsville, N. C., and two addresses on "Presbyterianism in Educational Work in North Carolina During the Century," by Dr. A. H. Smith, of the University of Virginia, and Dr. D. H. Hill, of the Agricultural and Mechanical College, Raleigh, N. C.
